

Carmen Harris:

The difference that you make in somebody else's life is absolutely incredible.

Shelby Wilson:

I was motivated to join the behavioral health field because I had in the past decided that I was going to advocate for children with similar backgrounds to my own.

Cedric Mfuranzima:

Becoming a DSP wasn't something of an accident. To me it was a conscious decision. I was curious, and I had a heart to care for people.

Hattie Sutton:

I never thought that I would get into the caretaking field. On my own journey of mental health, I was led to help others. I learned that mental health is just as important as your physical health, and it didn't mean that I was weak because I had PTSD.

Carmen Harris:

I think this would be the perfect job for a retired person, male or female, because it's very humbling. I can't say enough about it.

Justin Dyer:

The right personality and character traits, in my opinion, to be a DSP is kind, caring, and understanding.

Cedric Mfuranzima:

My advice will be, be curious. Try to improve other people's lives, and welcome the challenge. You learn a lot about yourself, and make a great living.

Shelby Wilson:

As a younger person, I find that the most rewarding part of my job as a behavioral health professional is the emotional gratification in seeing my clients succeed.

Speaker 6:

Visit caringfor.me.org to learn more and make an impact through a compassionate career.

